NBMDA Gives a Voice to Emerging Distribution Leaders

CHICAGO – The North American Building Material Distribution Association (NBMDA) is proud to announce the launch of its Emerging Distribution Leaders Program. This initiative will assist up-and-coming professionals in reaching their full potential through the provision of coordinated education and relationship-building opportunities. The new program provides opportunities to connect and build relationships through education, networking and involvement in the association.

"Currently, we are accepting applications from our member company's executive teams. We believe this new program will help us curate a network of individuals who are eager to learn, hungry for growth and ready to engage with their peers in the channel," said Kevin Gammonley, Executive Vice President of NBMDA.

Selected participants will participate in a year-long program comprised of education and training that is both in-person and online. The program will conclude at the NBMDA Annual Convention in November. Those who successfully finish the program will be publically acknowledged and presented with a certificate of completion.

Details on the program can be found at www.nbmda.org.
